PREFACE.

THE object of this little work is to describe the remains of St John's Hospital, which were removed to make way for the New Chapel of St John's College, and to point out the alterations which they had undergone to accommodate them to the use of the Hospital and College at various periods of their long history. The alterations became apparent during the removal of the old buildings, before which time many of them were quite forgotten. What was then observed has rendered it possible to restore in description the Chapel and Infirmary nearly to the state in which they were when occupied by the Hospital; and also when altered for the use of the College; and other more recent changes.

Many drawings, photographs and measurements were taken before and during the progress of the demolition, and from these the Plates which accompany this Essay have been prepared. A few of these illustrations have already appeared in the "Communications" of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society and the "Eagle;" some have been reduced from photographs taken by the late Mr. Nichols and printed by the Autotype process; and the remainder are lithographs.

Copies of the inscriptions on the tombs in the old Chapel are appended, and also a catalogue of the slabs, nearly all of which were removed from the old and placed in the new Chapel. As these latter are not so liable to injury as those now exposed to the weather on the site of the old building, it has not been considered necessary or desirable to do more than give a list of them.

The last chapter is devoted to a short account of the new Chapel. For most of the information there given, I am indebted to the Rev. H. Russell, B.D., Fellow of the College.

I am also much indebted to the Master and Fellows for their liberality in bearing all the expense of the letter-press and illustrations.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry should be supported by a valid receipt or invoice. This ensures transparency and allows for easy verification of the data.

In the second section, the author outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze the data. This includes both primary and secondary data collection techniques. The primary data was gathered through direct observation and interviews with key stakeholders. Secondary data was obtained from existing reports and databases.

The third section details the statistical analysis performed on the collected data. This involved using a range of statistical tests to identify trends and correlations. The results of these tests are presented in a series of tables and graphs, which clearly illustrate the findings of the study.

Finally, the document concludes with a series of recommendations based on the research findings. These recommendations are designed to help improve the efficiency and accuracy of the data collection process. It is hoped that these insights will be valuable to other researchers and practitioners in the field.
