PREFACE.

ANCIENTLY, 'Aberbrothock' was the name of a 'shire,' which included the whole of the lands now comprised within the parishes of Arbroath and St. Vigeans, together with a part of the parish of Carmylie. The name was not restricted to the territory which was of new erected by James VI, into the royal burgh of Arbroath in 1599. In the titte-page of this book the word 'Aberbrothock' is used still more comprehensively than in the ancient sense. comprises all the parishes within the district of the Presbytery of Arbroath. Of the nine pre-Reformation parish churches in this district seven were of the number of forty-six parish churches which belonged to the Abbay of Aberbrothock-the seven being Aberbrothock (St. Vigeans), Arbirlot, Inverkeiler. Lunan, and Panbride—the property of the Abbey down to the secularisation, and Barry and Guthrie, to dates prior to the secularisation. Besides the neighbourly and business intercourse of the people of town and country, the whole district has thus had a close ecclesiastical connection with Arbroath from very old times. The idea of this kind of special unity in the district has been adopted in the present work, as it has been also in the book 'Round about the Round O with its Poets,' the town of Arbroath and the neighbouring parishes being treated as a whole.

The pictures in this volume are from the drawings which Mr. John Adam, of Edinburgh—a native of Arbroath—prepared for 'Round about the Round O.' They are about three-quarters size of the originals, as produced in that work; are faithful reproductions by the Typographic Etching Company, London; and have been printed by Messrs Ballantyne, Hanson, & Co., Edinburgh.

For the authorities for statements of an historical character in the Notes to 'Aberbrothock Illustrated,' I refer to my 'History of Arbroath' (Arbr. 1876), 'Round about the Round O with its Poets' (Arbr. 1883, and popular edition, 1885), and Miller's 'Arbroath and its Abbey' (Edinb. 1860). The last mentioned work was printed, and the others printed and published, by Mr. Buncle, the publisher of this volume, to whose attachment to the district in which he has long been resident their origin is in large measure to be ascribed.
