Medication.

To you my dear SELF I dedicate this interesting offspring of my literary and philosophical genius. I confer upon you this honour the more readily that no one else is likely to be desirous of it. Besides, fortunately, no one knows me better than you, and you have always been able to discover more merit in me and my works than any one else could, and to appreciate my wit when nobody else would. Like other progeny, this will doubtless make a noise in the world, especially when going through the different processes of the water treatment—will laugh, cry, and kick up its heels, sometimes with, and sometimes without, either rhyme or reason. Like all precocious juveniles, it will, however, be most appreciated at home. Confident, my dear self, that this work will meet your approval, and hoping that it may conduce to the "Health and Pleasure" of your friends, I remain, with a high sense of your worth, and with profound respect,

Yours very affectionately,

J. B. O.
