INTRODUCTION

THESE addresses by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, given before the Northfield Bible Conference last August, have proved of such help and inspiration to so many Christians that I am persuaded their mission will be greatly increased in this permanent form.

What the church of Christ needs now is, not more creeds or articles of faith, not more factions or reformations, not more eloquence or learning, but more men with courage and wisdom, who, in a spirit of brotherly love, will make practical applications of those principles which the church accepts. "The great mass of our ministers are sound enough in the faith," said Spurgeon, "but not sound enough in the way they preach it." It has been the object of these addresses to arouse ministers and laymen to a sense of their privileges and responsibilities as "co-workers with Christ," and to call them to separation from the hindrances of the world.

As God has wonderfully owned these heart-searching messages by the blessing which they have brought to many of us who heard them, may he still more abundantly bless them in their present form, reaching over a wider area and calling men and women everywhere to a closer life with Christ.

D. L. MOODY.
