PREFACE.

BELIEVING that the Bible is a revelation from God, given both for spiritual enlightenment and as a great popular textbook, from which may be drawn a clear knowledge of those ethical principles upon which human society can alone successfully build individual and public character, I have in my spare moments prepared this little volume, which, it is hoped, will be found to contain at least a few grains of truth, and be instrumental in awaking with some a more correct comprehension of the essentiality of the Sacred Scriptures in the developing of a healthy social and civil life.

Political and social reformers are constantly and ostentatiously laboring to correct public abuses, and to impel the race forward toward the ideal ; but it is only where the Bible becomes the source of popular inspiration that we find an active reformatory spirit and a permanent progressive movement. And it is this great fact, which I wish to indelibly impress upon the minds of my countrymen, that they may be enabled to discharge with fidelity and with honor those sacred trusts of conscience and of liberty which a beneficent Providence has committed to their care.

The writer is not unconscious of the penalties as well as rewards of authorship. Silence may bring disappointment, and criticism may bring agony of spirit. But having supreme faith in the indestructibility and omnipotence of truth, we scatter the golden kernels in the manner most in consonance with the inspirations of our soul, trusting in the fructifying influences of the gentle dews and wooing sunshine, which ever, in the fullness of the season, bring forth the sheaf, and then the bread.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

"Tell me where the Bible is, and where it is not, and I will write a moral geography of the world."

Was significantly remarked by a certain tourist whose observations were not alone confined to art-galleries, museums, old architecture, classic ruin, and historic reminiscence—material expression of buried generations—but were more especially directed to the spiritual manifestations of the present—the character, homes and institutions of the living. The proposition, though embodying an idea popularly recognized as a relic of Puritanism—too antique and dogmatic for this self-sufficient, speculative, and commercial age, is nevertheless fundamental in character, vital in relationship, and broad in its reachings as are the necessities of the common weal; involving as it does, political and social, as well as moral conditions.

Unworthy of consideration though it may be deemed by the sensuous masses, it possesses, notwithstanding, for the statesman equally with the ethologist, a
