DEDICATION.

This little volume is dedicated to the young men and women of the United States who are contemplating matrimony with its inevitable responsibilities. The comforts of life with which the young women of this country have been surrounded in the homes of their fathers, built in the better days of the Republic, cannot be provided by the young men of the present day on account of the hard conditions which environ them. The families and friends of young women oppose their marriage with young men otherwise worthy, on account of the fear that it will be impossible for the united efforts of both to save them from poverty and want.

The author believes that a careful study of this book will enable the people, through the intelligent exercise of the elective franchise, to restore the conditions enjoyed by former generations, when happy homes were established throughout our vast domain. If this can be accomplished, the barrier which fear of poverty has erected between the young men and women of the country will be removed and the sacrament of marriage will again promise happiness, prosperity and progress.

WM. M. STEWART.
