

THE ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN WITH
ILLUSTRATIVE NOTES

Published @ 2017 Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd

ISBN 9780649449385

The English Flower Garden with Illustrative Notes by Henry A. Bright

Except for use in any review, the reproduction or utilisation of this work in whole or in part in any form by any electronic, mechanical or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including xerography, photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, is forbidden without the permission of the publisher, Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd, PO Box 1576 Collingwood, Victoria 3066 Australia.

All rights reserved.

Edited by Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd.
Cover @ 2017

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form or binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

www.triestepublishing.com

HENRY A. BRIGHT

THE ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN WITH
ILLUSTRATIVE NOTES

THE
ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN.

Wife Henry A. Bright
last year.

THE

ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN

WITH ILLUSTRATIVE NOTES

BY

HENRY A. BRIGHT

AUTHOR OF "A YEAR IN A LANCASHIRE GARDEN."

London:

MACMILLAN AND CO.

1881.

The Right of Translation and Reproduction is Reserved.

~~Lan 418.81~~

Harvard College Library
Norton Collection,
Dec. 3, 1907.

36885

LONDON:
R. CLAY, SONS, AND TAYLOR,
BREAD STREET HILL.

NAE
1805
B76
C.2

PREFACE.

IT is just a year ago since this Essay on "The English Flower Garden" was published in the Quarterly Review.

It was written with a twofold object: to give in the smallest compass an outline history of English gardens, and to show once again what makes the true charm and happiness of a garden. Many—perhaps too partial—friends have urged me to reprint this article. They have reminded me that, when the immediate circulation of any one number of a Review has ceased, its articles are virtually lost and buried, and they assure me that there are readers who may not have already seen, and who would yet care to read, this Essay. I hardly know how this may be, but I do know how very much I am indebted to the proprietor of the Quarterly for his great kindness in allowing me the opportunity of this reprint. Should this little book succeed in retaining the friends that A Year in a Lancashire Garden was happy enough to make, it will indeed be fortunate. It has been to me a matter of no little surprise (as, naturally, of pleasure) to find from the generous notices of the Press and from numerous private letters from owners of gardens, to whom I am entirely a stranger, that the views I have expressed as to the necessity of a reform in our gardens are very widely held. So long as a garden is only regarded as a means for displaying masses of gay colouring, half the delight and all the real interest of it are gone. It is only when we learn to make friends of individual plants, and recall their history and associations, that a garden becomes a pleasure for the intellect as well as for the senses. But I do not wish to carry my opinions to any extravagant length. It is Voltaire, I think, who says that "a man may have preferences but no exclusions," and I certainly would exclude nothing that is good in the present system. Bedding-out is occasionally very effective and sometimes necessary; and, on the other hand, a garden—such as I saw suggested somewhere the other day—which should contain only flowers known to Chaucer, would be extremely disappointing. However, bedding-out can take very good care of itself, and Chaucerian gardens will not be largely popular. Meanwhile, I sincerely hope that flowering shrubs and hardy herbaceous plants may be far more generally grown and cared for than they are at present.

It has seemed on the whole best to leave this Essay as it was written. I have made a few verbal corrections and inserted one or two short sentences, and that is all. I have, however, added illustrative Notes on points which seemed of some little interest.