PREFACE.

THE following little Work will probably interest its youthful readers by the pleasing diversity of its contents. Its language too, it is hoped, will be found sufficiently simple for juvenile capacities, without culpable neglect of grammatical precision, and politeness.

As poetical publications for the young are not very numerous, the present may perhaps be an acceptable addition to the number. And, in that case, if encouraged by the smiles of her little friends, the Authoress may possibly again put pen to paper for their instruction and amusement.

ROBIN REDBREAST.

ROBIN REDBREAST, thou art gone!

No, Janette, I cannot play :

Robin Redbreast, thou art flown

O'er the woodlands far away !

O my pretty little pet !

Don't you pity me, Janette ?

O ! I lov'd this little bird

In my very very heart !

And I thought, upon my word,

We should never never part :

O my pretty little pet !

Don't you pity me, Janette ?

Robin Redbreast, thou wert good !

Robin Redbreast, thou wert kind !
