LECTURE I.

MAN A SPIRITUAL BEING.....	Page 13

The subject to be considered—Possible methods of treatment—The method adopted—Should difficulties be stated?—Ground of belief that they should—The right way of meeting difficulties—Evils of exaggeration—The right of dissent—Beliefs have no value simply as such—Two questions—Comprehension of the phrase, "Beyond the grave"—Life after death not known—What cannot be known may, nevertheless, be believed—Causes of differences of belief—The debate inevitable and interminable—On the subject, two classes of views—Varieties in first class—Mixed variety—Varieties under second class—Theory espoused and defended—The crucial question, Is man a spiritual being?—Effect on the whole question of the discovery that man is simply an organism of matter—First great mistake—Additional difficulty—Sources of proof—First possible source—Second possible source—Both sources claimed—First kind of proof examined—Man a spirit shrouded in a body—Embarrassments removed—Spirit possesses the personal endowments—Differences between the shroud and its occupant—Powerlessness of the organism—Supremacy of the spirit—His power on the instrument limited—The body simply instrumental—Instinctive impulses of the nature of desires, may precede thinking, but they are not properly personal acts—Proof that the body is simply instrumental—Proof of the general proposition that spirit is a real and discrete substance—Spirit a thought factor—Thought underlies every organism—Illustration—Is thought a result of organization?—Results of human thought—Results of God's thought—Certainty that all organisms had a beginning—Proof that the present order cannot be eternal—Illustration from the structure and motions of the earth—Illustration from grain—Illustration from man—No aggregate of beginning can reach the unbegun—An eternal cause must underlie the order, which is not itself of the order—The cause must be a thinker—The cause must have more essential being than the effect—The proof that man is a spirit—Geological proof—The spirit seen not directly, but by reflection in the face—The spirit known by consciousness—The spirit seen in the machine—The body vanishes, the spirit abides—Illustration of the permanence of the conscious self—The picture gallery of memory a spirit hold—Definit on of spirit—The self-conscious ego a unit—The self a free self-centered power—The proof from Scripture.

LECTURE II.

MAN A SPIRITUAL BEING.....Page 59

Does the spirit survive the body?—No proof that death is destructive of the person—No proof that the body is necessary to the conscious activity of the spirit—Illustration—May not the body be, in many respects, a clog to the spirit?—Even now the spirit lives its highest life without sensation—Explanation asked for—Illustration—Lord Brougham's argument for a separate existence of the soul—The mind conscious of its own existence, though separated from the body—Death destroys the organism of man—The departure of the soul imperceptible to the senses—Future immortal existence not a matter of knowledge—Present conscious existence gives probability of continued existence—First proof of immortality—Nothing once created ever reduced to non-existence—The electric telegraph—Second argument—Nature of the soul—Unfolding of the soul—Unlimited power of the soul, or capacity for endless development—Illustration—Third argument—Instincts of the soul—Conscience—Fourth argument—The divine character requires immortality—First, his love—Justice—Fifth argument—Universal belief in immortality—Whence came the belief?—A beautiful illustration—Summary of preceding points.

LECTURE III.

MAN A SPIRITUAL BEING.....Page 109

Second source of proof, revelation—The Scriptures teach the doctrine of man's immortality—The Bible God's testimony—How we are affected when we come to the holy volume—Fullness of the deliverance—The matchless Teacher dies and rises again—The fact of future life being established, darkness still hangs over the subject—First reason for the obscurity—Second reason for the obscurity—Third reason for the obscurity—Are all immortal?—Power of the suggestion that at least the finally wicked perish out of existence—The attempt to prove that the wicked will cease to exist: its source—Appeal to the Scriptures in support of the utter extirpation of the wicked—The word rendered soul—Rule to determine the meaning of words of more meanings than one—Dr. George Bush's enumeration and classification of the words rendered "soul" and "spirit"—Passages which seem to represent death as overthrow of being—Such an interpretation not accordant with the true sense of Scripture theory of the unconscious state of the dead—The theory repugnant to reason—The Scriptures teach the dead are conscious—Distinction between the body of the person and the person itself—Penalty not annihilation—Scriptures which represent that eternal life is result of faith—The doctrine is unwelcome and horrible—But probably true—The doctrine must be accepted, painful though it be—The second point—Sleep of the soul—The intermediate state—Is the soul clothed during the intermediate state?—Where do souls dwell during the intermediate state?—The various stages of human existence intimate continually enlarged powers—How do souls employ themselves during the interval between death and the great judgment?—Man not designed to be immortal in the body given to him at creation—What are the supposable uses of bodies in the next life?—New ends of bodies in the future life—Resurrection of the man—Various theories of the resurrection considered.

THE DOCTRINE OF RECOGNITION IN A FUTURE LIFE—Interest of the subject—Assumption that the dead recognize each other in that future life—Relations of earth not renewed there—Recollections of the earthly life not obliterated—Death merely the removal, not destruction, of the soul—The departed will exist in a social state—Man's nature teaches this—Spirits are probably visible to each other—Scriptural argument for recognition in heaven.

INTRODUCTION.

THE substance of what follows was delivered in several unwritten addresses before the "Chautauqua Assembly," in 1878, and published in the "Assembly Daily Herald" at the time.

So many have expressed a wish to have the thoughts in a more permanent form, that I have judged it best to revise them, and, with some additions, to send them to the wider public in an inexpensive book.

Some few years since I furnished some magazine articles on "Recognition in the Future State." These were received with favor, and I have thought it proper to reproduce them here, with some enlargement. The subjects are so germane that the two discussions come into line and form a homogeneous whole, or completeness, which neither of them reaches alone.

It is believed that such is the intrinsic importance of the subject, and such its interest to our affections and our religious faith, that it deserves more attention than it has received; and the more so because of the materializing tendencies of the times under the specious guise of science and philosophy. The presentation herein given is intended for the average reader; but
