CONVERSATIONAL FRENCH PHRASES;

OE,

How to ask a Question and give an Answer.

Lever, Robson, and Franklyn, Great New Street and Potter Lane.

PREFACE.

All conversation is carried on by means of question and answer. Hence the great want, in attaining case of expression when speaking a foreign language, is to have all the different forms of question and answer ready in the memory for immediate use.

The present little book goes upon the principle of classifying such forms of speech under certain convenient heads; so that the learner may acquire them without having to wade through a mass of dialogues, as is usually the case, before he becomes familiar with any considerable number of colloquial phrases. Such a classification cannot fail, if diligently used, to give great facility of expression; because it enables the student to put all he learns of the language at once into easy conversational form. Thus, while such a classification of phrases serves the purpose of a somewhat extensive vocabulary, it also gives exactly the kind of practice which is most necessary for speaking with facility and accuracy.

J. D. MOBELL.
