Dear Soul, with all the fervor of thy race,
Yet having cast tradition's hand away
And groping toward a larger, clearer day,
How shalt thou find thy life's true resting place?
A woman's soul glows in thine eager face,
A woman's longing yearnings o'er it play,
Fixed, yet inconstant, unknown and astray,
Still searching for true beauty, and for grace—
Give, cries the spirit to thee, freely give!
Say not that thou art poor and hast no store,
Give hope, and joy, and love, so shalt thou live
And draw upon that sea of love, whose tide
Shall fill thee, heart and soul, and mind beside,
Till giving shall enrich thee more and more.
