FRANK AMONG THE RANCHEROS.

CHAPTER I.

A NOVEL BATTLE.

“PULL him along, Carlos! Pull him along!” shouted a young gentleman about sixteen years of age, as he danced about on the back porch of his uncle’s house, in a state of great excitement; “why do n’t you pull him along?”

“He ’ll come, after awhile,” replied the person addressed; “but he is very wild and obstinate.”

The boy on the porch was almost beside himself—so much so, in fact, that he found it utterly impossible to stand still. He was jumping wildly about, swinging his arms around his head, and laughing and shouting at the top of his lungs.
