FOUR LECTURES

ON SUBJECTS CONNECTED WITH

DIPLOMACY

BY

MOUNTAGUE BERNARD, M.A.

CHICHELE PROFESSOR OF INTERNATIONAL LAW AND DIPLOMACY, OXFORD

London
MACMILLAN AND CO.

1868

96

THE first of these Lectures was delivered in 1860, the other three respectively in 1865, 1866, and 1867. They are printed in substance as they were delivered, with some occasional alterations. Important changes in the state of Europe have occurred during the past eight years. I have not however thought it necessary to cancel or alter references to current events, or expressions of opinion suggested by circumstances existing at the time; nor could this have been done without inconvenient disturbance of the context.

ALL SOULS COLLEGE, OXFORD,

CONTENTS.

LECTURE I.

THE CONGRESS OF WESTPHALIA.

- Congresses of Westphalia and Vienna compared : Their resemblances and differences : Treaties of Westphalia related almost exclusively to Germany : Importance of these Treaties as forming an era of diplomatic history : Their value to the student : Plan on which they should be studied. 1-11.
- Powers represented at the Congress : Play of interests : Procrastination on both sides : Arrival of Plenipotentiaries : Full Powers : Commencement of Negotiations : Peace concluded : Comparative promptness of modern diplomacy : Causes of dilatoriness in the negotiations of Westphalia. 11-21.
- Münster during the Congress : Social features of the Congress : Pamphleteering : Bribery : Despatches stolen : Ceremonial. 21-27.
- What a Congress is : It is bound to no uniform mode of proceeding : It has no coercive authority : Disposition to ascribe authority to a Congress, and reasons for this : Advantages and disadvantages of this mode of negotiating. 27-37.
- General plan of a Treaty of Peace : Framework of the Treaties of Westphalia. 37-39.
- The 'Satisfaction of the Crowns' ;
- a. Cessions to France. 39-41.
 - b. Cessions to Sweden. 42.
- The 'Removal of Grievances' ;
- a. Settlement of questions relating to Religion in Germany : Observations on it : Its effects. 42-50.
 - b. Political constitution of the Empire : Its subsequent condition : Condition of Germany since 1815. 50-60.

LECTURE II.

SYSTEMS OF POLICY.

What a 'System' is. 61.

Views current among political writers of the Eighteenth Century:

How a System should be framed—Natural enmities and alliances: Examples: Tendency of Systems to become aggressive: Current rules of policy. 62-73.

Systems obsolete, and why;

a. Territorial aggrandisement less coveted. 73-77.

b. Permanent alliances proved to be insecure: Causes which have made the policy of nations uncertain: The real guarantee for co-operation is a common interest: France and her alliances: Comparative isolation of Great Britain. 77-92.

Evils attendant on the policy of permanent alliances: Foregoing remarks, how far they need qualification. 92-95.

Europe since 1815; America. 95, 96.

Concluding remarks;

a. The 'Balance of Power.' 97-100.

b. Present tendencies of society: Effects of the spread of commerce; of the absorption of small States; of popular government: Conclusion. 101-106.

Note A on Lecture II. 107-109.

LECTURE III.

DIPLOMACY PAST AND PRESENT.

Meanings of 'Diplomacy.' 111.

Vices ascribed to earlier diplomacy, and its comparative importance:

Personal influences in politics—Greater use for them in former times: Scantiness of the means of information—Effect of this on an ambassador's position: Difficulty of communication, and its consequences : Insincerity attributed to Diplomacy—

Causes which tended to promote it—Importance of sincerity :
Bribery, and other practices—Use of cipher : Diplomatic etiquette—Use and abuse of forms. 112-139.

The foregoing observations summarised : Classes from which diplomatic agents were formerly drawn : Growth of the diplomatic profession : Objections to permanent missions, and to professional diplomacy : Advantages of them : Qualifications for this service : Special knowledge : French as the common language of diplomacy : Diplomacy as a career. 139-161.

LECTURE IV.

THE OBLIGATION OF TREATIES.

Current opinions on this subject. 163, 164.

Meaning of the words 'Treaty' and 'Obligation.' 164-166.

Moral obligation as applied to Nations or Governments : Character and province of International Ethics : Moral obligation of Treaties. 166-169.

Nations are not subject to Legal Obligations strictly so called—Nature and character of International Law : Rules of International Law respecting Treaties : Their inadequacy to determine the question what Treaties are binding : Effect of this on International Morality : Assistance which private law affords to private morality : Such assistance wanting to international morality. 169-177.

Special difficulties which belong to International Contracts : Circumstances by which the ordinary presumption that a contract imports advantage is weakened when applied to Treaties :
They specially need, therefore, a controlling and discriminating authority—which is wanting : In its absence, the rule 'Pacta sunt servanda' is inevitably applied with rigour : This rigour cannot be maintained in practice : Yet the laxity of practice has been exaggerated : Reasons for this. 178-186.

Objects to be desired : Influences which may be expected to affect the conduct of Governments in this matter ;

a. Slow development of the conception of a binding contract : Artificial Securities : Disuse of them : Their effects. 187-192.

b. Dynastic policy, its effect on Treaties, and its decline. 193, 194.

c. Tendency of International Contracts to diminish rather than increase in number and importance—Beneficial effect of this. 194-197.

d. International engagements should be definite and clear : What is meant by the substance of a Treaty : Importance of attending to it. 197-203.

Recapitulation. 203-205.
