The frontispiece is from a portrait of Jane Austen, said to have been painted, when she was on a visit to Bath, at about the age of fifteen, by Johann Zoffany. The original is in the possession of the Rev. J. Morland Rice, Rector of Bramber, Sussex, and grandson of Miss Austen's second brother, Edward. It is here reproduced by the kind permission of Mr Rice, who tells me that it formerly belonged to Colonel Austen of Kippington, a descendant of the kind "Uncle Francis" Austen, who was Miss Austen's great-uncle, and the early friend of her father. He gave it to his friend, Mrs Hardinge-Newman, a devoted admirer of the novelist, and her step-son, Dr Hardinge-Newman, left it to Mr Rice.—Ed.
