THE MODEL KITCHEN

I

INTRODUCTION

IT is imperative in these days of high rents in cities, more especially in the Metropolis, that we reduce our household impedimenta as much as possible; and not only must we do this, but we must simplify our ideas concerning our style of living. We begin by a reduction of room space when we take a "flat," as the flat professes to offer us a house and all its appurtenances in the most compact form: it does this, undoubtedly, but it does it in miniature. The flat, when well-built, convenient, and artistically arranged, is a type of dwelling well suited to city life. That all flats are not successful as dwellings, is no fault of the system or plan; but the fault of the jerry-builder, who has sacrificed reason and quality to appearance. All the same, when we have secured a flat that really is
