AN ORIGINAL WORK.

Hold my right hand, Almighty, and me teach To strike the lyre, but seldom struck, to notes Harmonious with the Morning Stars, and pure As those by sainted bards and angels sung, Which wake the echoes of sternity; That fools may hear and tremble, and the wise, Instructed, listen. Pollok's Course of Time.

Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth-when the Morning Stars sang together, and all the sons of God should for joy.-Job xxxviii, 4-7.

PREFACE.

Books have been multiplied on every side, and there are many on different subjects; but the number of original American productions is, indeed, exceedingly few. Poetical performances, especially those of a religious nature, are still more scarce. Whether a publication strictly religious, in the main, will meet with the approbation and acceptance of an enlightened and liberal people, is now to be determined. The object of the author is, the dissemination of religious troth and the amelioration of the heart. He has not the vanity to suppose that his productions are equal to our standard poets, who have had both time and leisure to give ornament to their style, and to embellish their stanzas with all the finsel of the most glittering periods; yet, he is not ashamed to avow that some of his flights would not disgrace the best of them. He makes this assertion with the more freedom and the less temerity, as he has predicated his opinion on the judgment of gentlemen whose minds he deems superior to his own. Though his advantages have not been equal to some of those who have preceded him, yet his stanzas do not sink much below them. The reader will perceive that he has taken some pains, not to adorn his numbers with the tropes and figures of rhetoric, but to make his verses flow smoothly and freely, without stiffness on the one hand, and fustian on the other. He is of the opinion that he might interweave a number of those backneyed and almost worn-out epithets—Mark-eyed Love—Doveeyed Peace—Pale-eyed Eavy—Leaden-eyed Slumber— Iron-toothed Time, &c. &c.—and yet, like a certain European Bard, of the present day, produce a—glittering nothing! The author seeks not to dazzle the eye, but to lead the mind to the Fountain of all Goodness, where he may slake his thirst, and satisfy his immortal spirit with streams that never fail; and where

PREFACE.

> "Salvation in abundance flows, Like floods of milk and wine."

He must he candid enough, and he is not ashamed to confess; that religious effusions alone, are the most congenial to his heart; and of these he has in possession, perhaps, more than a thousand essays. In these pages he wishes not to introduce one single line which, in the day of God, he would had been expanged. His piece, entitled, "The Harmonies of Creation; or, The Music of the Morning Stars," was suggested to his mind by a recurrence to Job, xxxviii, 1-7; and he sincerely regrets that he cannot, such is his scarcity of time, take that pains which he ought, to give it a more substantial and elegant form; by retrenching what is rather lame, and adding some original ideas, which would make it appear to greater advantage. Every syllable and every line, so far as the author knows, are purely original-the plan-the language-the form, and the ideas; nor has he resorted to fiction, any further, than it might serve his convenience. for laying the foundation of the poem.

He hopes that in a future edition, should there ever be a call for it, that it will appear in a more respectable dress. The piece "On the Cracifixion," &c. is entirely
