PREFACE

Business laws are rules that govern business transactions. These rules must be so clearly presented that the learner will be able to apply them in his ordinary daily affairs.

The method here used has the merit of being logical and at the same time interesting and practical. First, the principles; second, their relation to the formation of contracts; third, their application to actual cases as decided by the highest courts.

The learner should yoke and rivet every principle he studies to the actual facts of his own experience, otherwise he cannot meet the test of application, for APPLICATION is the final test.

PURPOSE

We learn to do by doing—that is an axiom. We learn to write business papers by writing such papers as are based on the facts of our own experience. Ability to do this comes from intelligent practice under wise guidance.

One may get practice, to some extent, by serving an apprenticeship in a business office; but this course is open to few, it gives inadequate experience except in a narrow routine, and it is ENTIRELY TOO SLOW to be justified by results.

Hence, the purpose of this book is to eliminate the long term of apprenticeship, to give a wide range of experience to all who seek it, by presenting material, both law and facts, for application in constructive work. If the guidance given is faithfully followed, progress is bound to result.
