"We value the entrance requirement in English simply for the discipline it gives, or should give, in attentive, appreciative, intelligent reading. We hope that the schools will allow sufficient time for the reading and class discussion of the selected masterpieces to form in the student's mind at least an initial literary sense. We do not desire the historical study of English literature in the preparatory work, nor do we expect any save the simplest knowledge of the principles of criticism; but we do look forward to the day when our students shall come to us with such a thorough English training that to read a book will mean to know its substance, to feel its power, and to take a more or less accurate impression of its artistic quality."

KATHERINE LEE BATES,

Professor of English Literature in Wellesley College.
