PREFATORY NOTE.

THE subjects considered in these Three Sermons are certainly of some importance. Within the limits of a discourse such subjects can only be treated broadly and briefly. Nevertheless the Author has not consciously slurred over any palpable difficulty, and he certainly has not used language to conceal his ideas, but to express them. They are, none the less, written in a spirit of true Christian Charity, because, without circumlocution and ambiguity, he has stated the case truthfully and fairly, and proposed, as he believes, the only efficient and reasonable remedy for existing evils.
