Grandma Bright's Q. P's.

CHAPTER I.

THOSE who have read Guessing at Heroes will remember Grandma Bright, and what jolly evenings the Allen children used to spend in her room, playing her game of heroes, and ending the evening with treats of apples, and nuts, and chocolate caramels, with delightful surprises of all kinds thrown in. And so, perhaps, they will not object to going to Grandma's room again with the Allen and Barker children, who have all grown older, of course, since we last met them.

Hugh and Jack, and Will Barker are in long trousers, and have put on standing collars, and really look very grown up—for you know that
