PREFACE.

THIS volume contains the substance of a course of five Lectures which I delivered last October, at the London School of Economics, on the Influence of Religious Conceptions upon the Historical Development of Economic Doctrines and Theories. I have been conscious throughout of my indebtedness to the erudite and suggestive work of Dr. Troeltsch, entitled Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen. For the present I have endeavoured to concentrate attention on the history of Thought, but I hope to supplement the discussion at another time by dealing with the part played by Christianity in helping to form the modern conception of Social Duty.

CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTION.

Changes in external conditions, and in mental habits. Religious influence as embodied in Mediæval Institutions. The religious, and the scientific habit of mind. The recognition of this contrast as a help to interpret the past, and to criticise current opinion in the present - - - - - 1

II. ORDER AND PROGRESS.

The Creator as the Supreme Owner, and human claims to use His gifts. Communism and exclusive use. Different interpretations of the good of the Community. Enclosures. The encroachment of progressive peoples on primitive races. The appropriate standpoints for studying economic phenomena, in mediæval and in modern times respectively. Recent reversion to the mediæval standpoint - - - 9

III. WORK AND THE MAINTENANCE OF LABOUR.

The monastery as a unit of industrial organisation. The vitality of the monastic ideal. The Christian conception of work, as a privilege and a discipline. The principle of assigning maintenance to labour of any kind, contrasted with that of remunerating of each man according to his worth in the labour market. The difficulty of reckoning the living wage. The success of Christian Communism. The effectiveness of spiritual forces - - - - - 21

IV. THE CITY AND THE NATION AS ECONOMIC UNITS.

The monastery and the town as economic units. The maintenance of commercial morality. The promotion of common interests. Fairs and the commercial spirit. The field of Economic Science. The decay of the towns as centres of well-ordered economic life. The rise of national economic organisation. The body politic and the body economic. Disparagement of national life - - - - - 38

V. CALVINISM AND CAPITAL.

A reformed Christian polity and royal power. Christian Polity as reconstructed by Calvin. The Old Testament and usury. City Theocracies and commerce. The Scottish National Theocracy and industry. The gain and loss in alliance with Capital. The development of Economic Science - - - 58
