ENCOURAGED by the success of a former volume, under the title of "Pulpit Studies," the Author has ventured to present to the public a second, of a somewhat more miscellaneous character. As in the former, several of the longer sketches are the unfinished but admirable productions of a deceased friend; he feels it right to state that a few in the present are by the same hand. From two or three of the specimens, his younger brethren may perceive with what advantage the old divinity of the seventeenth century may be read and turned to account. The Author's own productions will speak for themselves; they constitute the bulk of the volume, and are of a sufficiently marked character. In compliance with the request of several of his friends, to whose judgment he must always defer, he has closed the volume with a sermon delivered on missionary and other public occasions.

Foleshill, October 17th, 1846.
