About Women

What a woman cannot grasp instinctively she fears and suspects and can never understand.

Against a man morality-mad we have our fists for defense, but against a woman . . .

Beauty in woman is that potent alchemy which transforms men into asses.

When a woman wants to sin even the Decalogue is her refuge, the very Saints are her abettors.

The woman who is indifferent towards me I dismiss with an audible scoff at her understanding.

Prudery is the respectable woman's way of obtruding her sexual desires.

Rob a woman of cunning and deceit and what remains is bare female.

A woman that speaks the truth finds no favor in my eyes, for she disturbs the pretty theories I cherish about her sex.

Woman's habitat is in the realm of common-places.

Friendship between two women is nothing more than a pledge to take each other seriously.
