To those who aid in forming what is termed "Society" at the great summer resorts, where fashion, frivolity, and folly seem to reign supreme, and the greatest aim in life to be a new dress, a flirtation, or the latest figure in the "German;" but where, underlying this apparent worldliness, are often true hearts, generous natures, and a good sense, that the faults of an artificial system of education have been unable to crush out.

Boston, Nov., 1876.
