PREFACE.

THE reading world is progressing, and reforming the old ladder to learning, even from its first rude steps. We have ventured, with a satisfactory amount of success, to improve many of the Educational Works of the last generation; and we do not see why the ancient "Reading Made Easy," which sowed the good seed that produced the great men of past days, should not be reconstructed, as a foundation for the great, and wise, and good of the age to come. Under this impression, we fearlessly send out our
