A FRAGMENT

BY
C. C. COTTERILL.

οὐκ ὕπνῳ, ἀλλ' ὄπῳ ἐσθλῶν, ἢ τοι τετελεσμένον ἔσται

No dream, but waking vision sound and true,
Which one day verily shall be fulfilled.

NOTE

It is due to the criticisms and suggestions of friends that this small fragment is not more imperfect than it is, and I am very grateful to them.

I have had lately to dictate mainly instead of writing, with the result of many defects which, though patent enough, I have not always been able to correct.

There might, no doubt, have been further improvement in what is now published, but this would have taken time, and I felt that this appeal had already been too long deferred.
