PRELUDE.

*To touch a note not inharmonious
With earth's glad music, as it passes by,
Swelling the strain ; this is a poet's joy.*

*To strike a chord, which, for a little while,
May sound and dwell within the hearts of men
Before it dies ; this is a poet's hope.*

*To lean and listen to Æolian notes
That linger, ere, wind-wafted, they shall pass—
Floating away ; this is a poet's rest.*

*To break into full ecstasy of song
With thoughts that wing his willing heart to heaven,
On Music borne ; this is a poet's meed.*

*What if, perchance, one new-born melody
May echo on and fill the world with love
That never dies ; that were a poet's crown.*
