AUTHOR'S PREFACE

The following studies of the cooperative movement in Serbia and Rumania during and after the War are the outcome of an investigation undertaken by me at the instigation in the first instance and with the financial support of the Horace Plunkett Foundation Trust and the English Labour Research Department. The preparation of a report for the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace enabled me to extend the time and scope of my investigation. I had originally intended to make a full inquiry into Italian cooperation, but I found that were I to attempt this I should have to devote six months or a year to Italy alone. The extraordinary number of cooperative organizations in Italy and the wide range of their activities are such that no one could attempt to speak with authority who had not spent a very long time in the country and who did not speak Italian almost as his native language. I therefore attempted only a cursory view of Italian cooperation and have appended a few brief and inadequate notes of what I saw in Italy.

My investigations in Jugoslavia and Rumania were far more fruitful, and I think I may claim to give a fairly comprehensive view of cooperative conditions in these countries. I have not seen any accounts of them which give as general a description as I have attempted, and therefore I hope that the reader will find matter which will interest him.

I had originally intended to return to Ireland through Hungary, Austria and Czechoslovakia, but the fates decided against this. My companion on the journey was an Irish agriculturist, Mr. A. Vere O'Brien, whose practical knowledge of farming was of great assistance to me. Unfortunately, he became seriously ill, which necessitated the curtailment of my plans. After a month in a hospital at Brasov (Cronstadt) he became well enough to travel again. But traveling in Eastern Europe was very difficult. The trains were so crowded that, with luck, standing room in a corridor only was obtainable. Many persons traveled on the roofs of the coaches, and I have seen them climbing down and hanging on between the carriages while passing through a tunnel! There was only one good train from Rumania westward, the Simplon Orient Express, and as it passed through Jugoslavia we had reluctantly to abandon our visit to Hungary and Austria.

The reports were written under certain disadvantages arising out of the political situation in Ireland. My diaries, written in the form of letters, were seized by the British military authorities. Fortunately, my note-books were not discovered, and I have therefore been able to supply the technical details, but by the loss of my record of casual remarks and impressions my report has been deprived of much that would not only have made it pleasanter to read but would also have thrown light on the social conditions which influence cooperative movement in the various places I visited.

I should like to take this opportunity of thanking those who by their hospitality and kindness made it possible for me to learn much that would otherwise have been difficult to discover. I should particularly mention Signor Fortis of Milan, Dr. Costanzo of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Signor Mami at Bologna, Signor Zanchetta at Treviso, MM. Galyer and Vukmir at Zagreb, the Secretaries of the Cooperative Unions at Ljubljana, Split and Sarajevo, and, last but not least in Jugoslavia, M. M. Avramovitch and Dr. Prohaska of the Union of Belgrade, to whom I owe more than I can well express. In Rumania the Director of the Union of Credit Societies and the Director of the Union of Agricultural Societies, and M. G. Mladenatz and M. Teodorescu, who accompanied me on visits to societies, were all of the greatest assistance and kindness. M. Lupu also gave me valuable help.
