

THE LATIN PRONOUNS IS,
HIC, ISTE, IPSE; A
SEMASIOLOGICAL STUDY

Published @ 2017 Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd

ISBN 9780649168521

The Latin pronouns is, hic, iste, ipse; a semasiological study by Clarence Linton Meader

Except for use in any review, the reproduction or utilisation of this work in whole or in part in any form by any electronic, mechanical or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including xerography, photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, is forbidden without the permission of the publisher, Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd, PO Box 1576 Collingwood, Victoria 3066 Australia.

All rights reserved.

Edited by Trieste Publishing Pty Ltd.
Cover @ 2017

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form or binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

www.triestepublishing.com

CLARENCE LINTON MEADER

THE LATIN PRONOUNS IS,
HIC, ISTE, IPSE; A
SEMASIOLOGICAL STUDY

THE LATIN PRONOUNS.

THE LATIN PRONOUNS

IS : HIC : ISTE : IPSE

A SEMASIOLOGICAL STUDY

BY

CLARENCE LINTON MEADIER, PH.D.,
INSTRUCTOR IN LATIN IN THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

New York

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

LONDON: MACMILLAN CO., LTD.

1901

All rights reserved

P1
233
M46

07
A
1
1
7

TO
PROFESSOR EDUARD VON WOELFFLIN
THIS WORK IS
RESPECTFULLY AND GRATEFULLY DEDICATED.

PREFACE.

The general plan of the following book<sup>1</sup> was outlined and the collection of material begun in Munich, in the summer of 1898. By June 1899 such progress had been made, that I found it possible to state my results in a form sufficiently definite to enable Professor Wölfflin to make an abstract of the same for publication in the eleventh volume of the Archiv für lateinische Lexikographie und Grammatik. Since my return to America in the fall of 1899, I have devoted such spare time as the duties of my position have allowed, to the further investigation of the subject, and have been able not only to add important new results to those already obtained, but to extend and illustrate still more fully by varied citations the results set forth in the printed abstract.

The original plan of the work provided for a chapter on ille and one on idem. These would have formed chapters II and III, the present chapters II, III, IV and V becoming IV, V, VI and VII. As they are not yet in a suitable form for printing, they are omitted for the present. The results thus far obtained in the study of the two pronouns are partly given in chapter V.

<sup>1</sup>In the summer of 1900 chapter I and Section A. of chapter II were submitted to the classical faculty of the University of Michigan as a thesis for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

The present work contains the results of a line of investigation, in the conduct of which the historical method has been followed. In this particular it differs from all others that have been written on the subject. The most important of the modern treatises, that of Joseph Bach, extensive as it is (270 pages), makes no effort to discuss the pronouns from this point of view. It is confined almost entirely to the usage of the ante-classical period, and has for its main object the establishment of the thesis, that in the scriptores prisci the three demonstratives hic, iste and ille correspond to the three persons of the verb respectively. The only attempts of a historical nature that have hitherto been made are in the form of brief notices, to be found, for example, in Schmalz's Lateinische Syntax and in various monographs on the Latinity of particular writers. These rarely exceed a page or two in extent, and from the nature of the case make no claim to being anything else than fragments. Such works are, to be sure, of very great value, and without them an historical grammar in the proper sense of the word would be impossible. Yet they have their limitations and necessarily lack the perspective gained by following the changing meanings of the words through several centuries and by observing their relationships to each other and to synonymous expressions.

The selection of Latin texts from which the material for the present work was taken, is very full and representative, and covers every period of the development of the Latin language from Plautus to Isidore, as may be seen from the list of sources printed at the end of the volume.