RICHES WITHOUT WINGS.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION—THE CLEVELAND HOME.

"Perhaps they have heard some talk,—'Such an one is a great rich man;' and another except to it,—'Yes, but he hath great charge of children;' as if it were an abatement to his riches."

LORD BACON.

Who is willing, like a sweet child, to submit to the guidance of providence?—to lay his head, as it were, upon the bosom of that beneficent Power, that does and will order all for the best?—receiving from the hand of our great Father his portion of daily bread, and partaking thereof with a cheerful and grateful spirit—taking no thought for the morrow? Alas, not one. All respond to the sentiment, "sufficient
