" Deep in the heart of the painter
His holiest art lies unblinden,
Back of the song of the singer
The soul of the poet is hidden."

To the near and dear ones, to neighbors, publishers; and to well-wishers whom I have not met in the flesh: to all of these, and all others to whom this book may come as a greeting, it is respectfully inscribed by

PREFACE.

" Ships that pass in the night
And speak each other in passing.—
Only a signal shown, only a wafted greeting,
Then darkness again and a silence."

In sending forth this little book, the author has mainly two objects in view. One of these is to see the humble waifs of his pen brought together and given more permanent form. There is a sense of pleasure in calling as it were these children home from the corners of periodicals, and dressing them up in new garments. The second object of the publication is to remind our vigorous and increasing population of some of the more immaterial phases of life on every hand. Flesh and bone decay, but the spirit, the dream, the fancy, live forever. My humble desire has been in the past, and is here, to encourage the better natures of men—to divert, in passing, the thought from ambition wholly sordid, and open the way in a small degree for those inexpressible ideals so close to every hopeful heart.

If in "Songs of the Sioux" you come to see beauties of river and prairie not before noted, the work of composition and the expense of publication will have been repaid.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry, no matter how small, should be recorded to ensure the integrity of the financial statements. This includes not only sales and purchases but also expenses, income, and any other financial activity.

The second part of the document provides a detailed breakdown of the accounting cycle. It outlines the ten steps involved in the process, from identifying the accounting entity to preparing financial statements. Each step is explained in detail, with examples provided to illustrate the concepts.

The third part of the document discusses the various types of accounts used in accounting. It categorizes accounts into assets, liabilities, equity, revenue, and expense accounts. It explains how each type of account is used and how they interact with each other in the accounting process.

The fourth part of the document discusses the importance of the double-entry system. It explains how every transaction is recorded in two accounts, one as a debit and one as a credit, to ensure that the accounting equation remains balanced. It provides examples of how to record a transaction using the double-entry system.

The fifth part of the document discusses the importance of the trial balance. It explains how a trial balance is prepared and how it is used to check the accuracy of the accounting records. It provides a sample trial balance to illustrate the process.

The sixth part of the document discusses the importance of the income statement. It explains how the income statement is prepared and how it is used to determine the profitability of the business. It provides a sample income statement to illustrate the process.

The seventh part of the document discusses the importance of the balance sheet. It explains how the balance sheet is prepared and how it is used to determine the financial position of the business. It provides a sample balance sheet to illustrate the process.

The eighth part of the document discusses the importance of the statement of owner's equity. It explains how the statement of owner's equity is prepared and how it is used to determine the changes in the owner's equity over a period of time. It provides a sample statement of owner's equity to illustrate the process.

The ninth part of the document discusses the importance of the statement of cash flows. It explains how the statement of cash flows is prepared and how it is used to determine the cash flows of the business. It provides a sample statement of cash flows to illustrate the process.

The tenth part of the document discusses the importance of the closing process. It explains how the closing process is performed and how it is used to reset the accounting records for the beginning of the next period. It provides a sample closing process to illustrate the process.
