CHAPTER I.

MY RESURRECTION.

I HURRY over the hideous horrors of the many weeks of my entombment by a single stroke of my pen. Language pigments cannot paint the darkness, dreariness, and depression which weighed like mountains on my sorrow-stricken soul. Hope after hope flickered, then languished and died. Desperation and despair rose upon me at times with maniacal fury. During sleep I was cruciated by nightmares and all the demons of dreamland, and in my waking hours I was tortured by still more dreadful realities. Now a mirage of the mind allured me with hoaxing hopes, anon the frontiers between sleep and waking were so swept away, that I was unable to distinguish apparitions from actualities.
