ENGLAND'S ANGEL.

ts 🔅

I.

As, in the glimmering autumn glade
When no rude wind is blowing,
The moon above the pinewood peers
While yet the west is glowing:
So—when the hues of passion fade
Our mortal pride o'erthrowing,
There rises through the deepening shade
Beyond the hush of hopes decayed
Another world in white arrayed;
And dim upon our dreaming ears
A voice—thy voice, celestial maid,—
Falls, like a river flowing;
Singing to those that sow in tears
The harvest of their sowing.

II.

В

"It shall be measured" saith the lips Of Justice, "even as ye mete":— Mightier is she than many ships, Older than flag or fleet. The sea is grand with England's dead Who died for duty not for fame: And still they watch with jealous dread Her splendour and her shame.

"Ye sow your seed through every land; And yet it seems ye do not know— My people do not understand What seed it is they sow.

"If might be all the right ye have,— Then—barren as the broken deep, And bitter as the beaten wave The harvest ye shall reap."

III.

Faint, as at dawn a gentle wind

That sways a field of standing wheat,

She breathes upon me, and my mind

Bows down before her feet.

"O drink the living water-springs Of lowly duties, humble joys; Peace to the pure in heart," she sings, "For they shall hear my voice."

IV.

- "I called to you, but ye were deaf, Ye only whispered—as I passed— That, like the oak's tenacious leaf, The strongest fall the last.
- "Go, call your children from afar 1 Bind ye the Mazzaroth in one! Can the bright splendour of a star Redeem a dying sun?
- "Oh red with blood in many lands!

 How shall my Temple builded be?—

 Swift through Time's glass the glowing sands

 That measure my decree
- "Sink, and can never be recalled:
 O, guard the moments ere they glide!
 So, when the nations stand appalled,
 Or ere th' indignant tide
- "Of want and woe, and war's wild shock
 Beat down strong thrones,—the Saxon race
 Shall hew me from the living rock
 Justice—my temple-base.
