OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

Upon previous work by the same Author, now out of print.

"There are few persons who read the book who will not admit that it contains not only promise of the future, but much of positive merit. There is imagination in Mr. Fletcher's work, and a facility in composition which removes him far out of the ordinary level of youthful writers of verse."—Western Daily Press, 1882.

"As first-fruits they indicate not a little promise. The author has evidently studied well the great masters, and has caught something of their spirit. He succeeds in touching some true poetic chords, and his verse is sweet and musical."—Literary World, 1882.

"Mr. Fletcher writes with taste and feeling, and there is true poetic fervour as well as chaste expression in his verses; . . . the closing poem is a fine piece of imaginative work."—Leeds Mercury, 1882.

"There is something solid in his work which makes us hopeful of what he may do hereafter."—Spectator, 1884.

"It is long since we met with a poem which has so completely engrossed us. Mr. Fletcher's verse may for its melody bear comparison with that of our best-known writers. We shall look to meet this author again."—Graphic, 1884.
