A MANUAL

FOR

HOSPITAL NURSES.

In order to define accurately the duties and the responsibilities of a nurse, we must consider them separately, as they concern her, in relation with four persons, or sets of persons:

- 1. Herself.
- 2. Her Superiors.
- 3. Her Fellow-Servants or Nurses.
- 4. The Patients entrusted to her care.

L—THE NURSE'S DUTIES AS REGARDS HERSELF.

She should be always neatly and quietly dressed. Where a special dress is adopted for the nurses it is not very easy to be otherwise than quietly dressed; but it should be remembered that, even off duty, gaudy ribbons and showy feathers do not become those who only wear their finery occasionally, any more than they do those who have an opportunity of doing so every day.

Ornaments of every kind should be avoided, but when absolutely necessary, should be of as simple a character as is possible.

A small well-stocked pincushion and a pair of scissors, suspended from the waist-belt of the apron, are seldom in the way, and always useful.

Aprons, cuffs, collars, and caps should be changed frequently; half an hour every day would be ample time to get ready sufficient clean linen to repair the damage of the day, and would be but a small price to pay for the advantage of being always neatly dressed.

Dresses made too long or too much extended are not only in the way, but also dangerous. High-heeled boots cannot but be noisy, and this should be reason sufficient to exclude them from a sick-room, where all engaged should endeavour to move about as little, as quietly, and as unobtrusively as possible.

A nurse should always have clean hands, taking especial care to cleanse them thoroughly after dressing any wound; and while carefully avoiding to waste too much time in adjusting and readjusting her dress, should always endeavour, in her own person, to set before her patients an example of neatness and cleanliness.

A nurse should always be up in time to have some breakfast before beginning her regular work; a want of food at this time often lays the foundation of a headache or disinclination for work during the rest of the day, which is seldom traced to the true cause. A night nurse should, if possible, be able to knit, crochet, or to do other noiseless work which does not require light, and which may serve as an agreeable safeguard against going to sleep.

On coming off duty a night nurse should have a bath, and should go for a brisk walk in the open air before going to bed.

II.—THE NURSE'S DUTIES TOWARDS HER SUPERIORS.

These may be summed up in a very few words, if a nurse will only bear in mind the position in which she is placed.

A nurse's responsibilities are undoubtedly very great, since she is entrusted with so many duties, in themselves apparently slight, but, taken together, of vital importance. Nevertheless, she should always remember that she is acting under the orders of her superiors, who are alone responsible for the results of their orders when properly carried out; and she should never presume to make any alteration whatever in the treatment of her cases or the arrangement of her ward without first of all ascertaining, if possible, the wishes of the responsible person and obtaining the necessary permission.

It is scarcely necessary to insist that the personal conduct of a nurse towards her superiors should always be above reproach; incivility, rudeness, or sulkiness under merited correction can never raise the character
