Preface.

THE object which I have had before me in writing the following tale, has been to show the distinction between the intellectual and the spiritual, and the insufficiency of mental powers, even though they be of a high order, either to render their possessor wise unto salvation, or to make him a fit instrument to accomplish a lofty mission amongst men. I am painfully aware that I have not carried out my design as I would have wished, that my work is a very imperfect one; but I humbly commend it to Him whose blessing alone can render it useful, and who knows under what a sense of weakness I have penned my little story.
