Prefatory

This book is descriptive, historical, instructive, truthful.

It is a safe book for the young people.

It is intended to be an interesting book for the old people.

These stories are drawn from the personal experiences of the author, during a trip across Nebraska, and westward over the mountains to the Pacific coast in the year 1852, and from a residence in Nebraska since May 16, 1867.

It is a book of frontier stories taken from actual life.

These stories were first printed in the county newspapers, with no thought of having them published in book form. They met with so much favor that it was determined to send them forth in a bound volume.

Here it is.
