THE Poems in this little volume were composed after the fourteenth, and before the nineteenth, year of their author. They are offered as they are, with the dew of life's morning fresh upon them. They found their growth in the spring-time of a young, glad heart. Since then a long season—a year and more—of physical suffering has shaded with deeper, truer meaning those words and thoughts which seem to partake more of poetic fancy than of experience.

They are most lovingly dedicated to my Mother, who has ever endeavored to cultivate aright the soil wherefrom they sprung; to sow good seed, and, having sown, to watch with faith, trusting all to Him who "giveth the increase."
