PREFACE

IN the preparation of the Laboratory Manual I have tried to make the directions as complete and clear as possible. Wherever there is any danger in carrying out an experiment, the necessary precautions are explicitly stated, even at the cost of some repetition.

Most of the experiments—but not all of them—are intended for individual laboratory work. This is a matter which will vary with the equipment of the school and the size of the classes. The following is a list of the numbers of the experiments which I have found to be better fitted for lecture-table or laboratory demonstrations than for individual work, but it is merely the result of my own experience, and is not intended to have any prescriptive implication:

Numbers 7, 9, 10, 27, 31, 40, 49a, 50, 51, 60, 128, 129, 133.

The questions placed after each chapter are based partly on the laboratory exercise and partly on the corresponding chapter of Part I. The student should not fall into the error of supposing that his own experimental work supplies all the necessary data for answering them.

CHAPTER	PAGE
INTRODUCTION—EXPERIMENTAL WORK	1
I.—WATER	5
II.—SOLUTION	16
III.—PHYSICAL AND CHEMICAL CHANGE—LAW OF THE IN- DESTRUCTIBILITY OF MATTER	21
IV.—MIXTURE—ELEMENT—COMPOUND—THE LAW OF DEFINITE PROPORTIONS	25
V.—HYDROGEN	28
VI.—OXYGEN AND HYDROGEN PEROXIDE	33
VII.—COMBUSTION	44
VIII.—PROBLEMS	46
IX.—SALT AND SODIUM	47
X.—CHLORINE	53
XI.—CHLORIDES—COMPOUNDS OF CHLORINE CONTAINING OXYGEN	61
XII.—QUESTIONS	64
XIII.—THE ATMOSPHERE—NITROGEN	65
XIV.—AMMONIA	72
XV.—COMPOUNDS OF NITROGEN AND OXYGEN	76
XVI.—ATOMIC AND MOLECULAR WEIGHTS—AVOGADRO'S LAW	82
XVII.—ACIDS, BASES, AND SALTS—METALS AND NON-METALS	84
XVIII.—THE SODIUM GROUP	90
XIX.—THE COPPER GROUP	92
XX.—SILVER	94

* Chapters correspond to those in Part I.
