PREFACE.

---

DEAR LITTLE ONES,

I come to you with thoughts from the angels, your loving guardians. Little children often want a little help to go brightly and bravely through the day, and this is just what I want to give you, by reminding you of our dear Lord's words, and of the holy examples of His saints.

They have two advantages, these little thoughts:—First, they are very short, and so will be easy to remember; and, secondly, they will not take long to read, so that they need not hinder you from whatever else you have to do. And may they help you is the sincere wish of "Ralph's cousin,"

"MOLLIE."

FIRST MORNING.

DILIGENCE.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might."

AMIDST the ruins of Italice, the ancient Seville, which, as you know is the capital of Andalusia, in Spain, stands a church, half convent, half fortress, where St. Isidore, the patron saint of modern Seville, began his studies. He was hopelessly stupid and slow, and many times he felt as if he could not go on, that he must give up learning in despair. One day, however, he fell into a brown study, during which his eye rested on an old well, the marble sides of which were worn into grooves by the constant friction of the cord which let down the bucket.
