PREFACE.

DR EDMUND CALAMY, the author of the following Sermons, was an eminent Nonconformist minister. He was born in 1600, and died in 1666, pastor of a congregation in London. Many of his discourses, preached on different public and particular occasions, were published, either in consequence of the request of the hearers, or to vindicate the doctrines he preached, or, as in the present volume, with the object of benefiting his congregation. His discourses exhibit that intimate acquaintance with scripture, that clear statement of the doctrines of the gospel, and practical application of the truth to the conscience, which distinguish the labours of the Nonconformist divines of that period. Of the value of the works of that body of men, the best proof that can be given is the very general republication which has been recently made of them, and the eagerness with which they have been received by the public. The present little volume is one of the excellent publications of that time, which, though it went through many editions soon after its first appearance, has been now long extremely scarce and almost unknown. Its value, as a practical, consolatory, and experimental work, is such, that the Editor considers the reprinting of it a service done to the Christian world.

Another edition of this little book has been published, because it is believed that there are those who may be quickened by it to a more diligent following of God, and confirmed in an humble, holy confidence in Him.
