"There was once a fairy who was so clever that she found out how to make butterflies. I don't mean sham ones, no ; but real live ones, which would fly, and eat, and lay eggs, and do everything that they ought ; and she was so proud of her skill that she went flying straight off to the North Pole, to boast to Mother Carey how she could make butterflies. It merely gives the impressions of a detached onlooker, who approached the present Indian Question by a path which might, I suppose, be called academic. That is in some ways an advantage; on the other hand, I present the word to any hostile critic who wants a stone near at
