THE DAISY.

All thy strength from weakness won,
Earthward when the storms may beat,
Back up-springing toward the sun,
Little pure-eyed Marguerite.

Lover of the earth and sky,
Making common pathways bright ;
Toward the sun, a steadfast eye,
Unto men, a heart of light.

PREFACE.

THOSE who have read and admired MISS JOHNSON-BROWN'S Nature-Myths, as they appeared from time to time in the Cheltenham Ladies' College Magazine, have long wished them to be reprinted as a whole; hence the thought of publishing a volume of her poems.

Then it seemed well to add some others by members of our Daisy Guild—an association of old pupils; and we think many will be glad to have those of Mrs. OWEN, which came out in the earlier numbers of our Magazine, and are now out of print.

The writers are anxious that the profits should go to a work in which we are all interested. S. Hilda's was founded by a friend now dead, to train teachers for Girls' High Schools and Colleges. It was a small seed that she planted, but it has grown up slowly and silently during the last seven years, and has become a great tree.
