HENRY HOUSMAN

SEVEN SERMON STORIES

By the same Author.

Fcap. 8vo., cloth, 3s. 6d.

READINGS ON THE PSALMS, with Notes on their

Musical Treatment, originally addressed to Choristers.

"We can thoroughly recommend these readings. They have grown out of a want deeply felt by the author. Their origin, then, is a guarantee of their practical character."—Church Review.

"It is well suited for family reading, for Sunday School classes, and particularly as a manual for choristers, whom it will not fail to interest in their duties, while enabling them to perform these duties with increased intelligence and expression. A book of so much genuine merit, and yet so unpretentious in treatment, deserves, and we hope it will secure, a very wide circulation."—Scottish Guardian.

"This is a kind of book very much wanted, and so far as we know, there is none at present which we can speak of as being superior to it."—Literary Churchman.

"No choir-master could employ himself better than by obtaining a copy of this book of Mr. Housman's, and reading his remarks on the Psalms to his pupils. The short time so occupied would be amply repaid in the increase of the intelligence of the choristers about the words and things which were presented to their notice."—English Churchman.

"A very instructive volume, in which a great deal of very interesting information is contained, and which those who have to train choirs will find most helpful in enabling them to 'sing with the understanding.' Its execution is as praiseworthy as its design is excellent."—Church Bells.

IT is now generally acknowledged by our parochial Clergy that to take young children—say between the ages of four and twelve—to Church, and expect them to behave with attention and reverence throughout the long Morning and Evening Services and Sermons, is not only to tax infant endurance beyond its powers, but also to incur the very serious risk of implanting a life-long distaste for public worship.

Instead then of taking the little ones to Church and forcing them to attend to devotions which even their seniors find require the utmost self-concentration, the wise and merciful custom has obtained of late of giving them a short cheerful Service in the school-room. This is an admirable way of turning the old Sunday morning's weariness into a delight; and then in Churches where there are three Services with Sermons, the afternoon may well be devoted specially to the young people.

At these children's Services, whether held in the schools or in Church, catechising in some form or other naturally
