MARTIN HUNTER.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the integrity of the financial system and for the ability to detect and prevent fraud.

2. The second part of the document outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze data. It describes the use of statistical techniques to identify trends and anomalies in the data, and the importance of using reliable sources of information.

3. The third part of the document discusses the role of the auditor in the process. It explains that the auditor's primary responsibility is to provide an independent and objective assessment of the financial statements. This involves a thorough review of the records and the application of professional judgment.

4. The fourth part of the document discusses the importance of transparency and accountability. It notes that the public has a right to know how their money is being spent, and that government officials have a duty to provide clear and accurate information about their activities.

5. The fifth part of the document discusses the role of the media in the process. It explains that the media plays a crucial role in informing the public about government activities and in holding officials accountable for their actions.

6. The sixth part of the document discusses the importance of public participation in the process. It notes that the public should be given the opportunity to provide input and feedback on government activities, and that this input should be taken into account in the decision-making process.

7. The seventh part of the document discusses the importance of ongoing monitoring and evaluation. It explains that government activities should be regularly monitored and evaluated to ensure that they are meeting their intended goals and that resources are being used effectively.

8. The eighth part of the document discusses the importance of transparency and accountability in the private sector. It notes that the same principles that apply to government activities should also apply to the activities of private organizations, and that the public has a right to know how their money is being spent.

9. The ninth part of the document discusses the importance of transparency and accountability in the non-profit sector. It notes that the same principles that apply to government activities should also apply to the activities of non-profit organizations, and that the public has a right to know how their money is being spent.

10. The tenth part of the document discusses the importance of transparency and accountability in the academic sector. It notes that the same principles that apply to government activities should also apply to the activities of academic institutions, and that the public has a right to know how their money is being spent.

INTRODUCTION.

BY the courtesy of Forest and Stream and Hunter-Trader-Trapper these articles are republished in book form by the author.

I have been induced to bring them out a second time under one cover by the frequent requests of my fellow bushmen who were kind enough to criticise them favorably when they first appeared in the magazine.

In this preamble I think it proper and possibly interesting to the reader to have a short synopsis of my career.

I entered the service of the Hudson's Bay Company in 1863 as a clerk and retired in 1903 a commissioned officer of twenty years' standing.

The modes of Trapping and Hunting were learned directly by personal participation in the chase with the Indians and the other stories heard first hand from the red man.

My service in the employ of the Great Fur Company extended from Labrador in the East
