The papers collected in this volume appeared recently as editorial contributions to "The Andover Review," a religious and theological periodical conducted by Egbert C. Smyth, William Jewett Tucker, J. W. Churchill, George Harris, and Edward Y. Hincks, Professors in Andover Theological Seminary. They are republished substantially as first issued. Some account of the reasons for presenting them is given in the introductory chapter.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

	PAGE
Reasons for discussion of the subject at the present time.
New method of dealing with Scripture. Better knowledge of the historical sources. Feeling that theological dogma conceals the real Jesus. Dissatisfaction with the theological conception. Restoration of the humanity of Christ. The need of reinvestigation and restatement	I

CHAPTER II.

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH.

Did the primitive church believe Jesus Christ to be a divine being? Belief and teaching of Paul. The preëxistence of Christ. Not a created being. Christian monotheism as including the divinity of Christ. His relation to the human race. The ultimate subjection of the Son. Terms "God" and "Christ" not equivalent. Writings of the other apostles. The Fourth Gospel. Jesus as the incarnate Word. The Word a personal principle. Belief in divinity embedded in the religious consciousness of the primitive church	10

CHAPTER III.

THE SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS OF JESUS.

Did Jesus believe himself to be a divine being? Frequent expression of his inner life not to be expected. His claim to a place in the human heart which man cannot have. He acted as Messiah. His spiritual sway. His authority and supremacy. Father and Son knowing each other. His use of miracles. The kingdom of God. The Son of man coming to judgment. Confirmation in the Fourth Gospel. Consciousness of preëxistence 37

CHAPTER IV.

THE EARLY CHURCH.

Statements of the earlier Christian teachers and documents. Letter from the church in Rome to the church in Corinth. Its occasion. God revealed in the sacrificial love of Christ, who is above angels. His death is in universal relations. His preëxistence is implied. Trinitarian allusions in an early tract. Testimony of Ignatius. The journey of Hegesippus. The testimony of a bishop in Asia Minor. The polemic of Celsus against the common belief. Testimony of Irenæus and of Origen. The first dissent from the common tradition on historical grounds, and the condemnation of it 63

CHAPTER V.

The Christian life of the early time. It is distinctive. A new ideal of virtue. Union with God makes life
