PREFACE.

HARDLY any one who reads the accounts of what is spoken and done in the world can fail to perceive an extending disaffection to the Laws and Institutions of the Kingdom, a diminution of the old loyal and national spirit, a depreciation of our privileges and blessings, civil and religious, and the premonitory signs of a dangerous conflict between the different classes of society, which, unless restrained by a firm hand, directed by a judicious and loving spirit, dealing out justice and equity to all classes, may bring us into a similar condition with that of France at the termination of her war with Germany.

Whilst laid up for three or four weeks with a broken leg, the Author, under the reflections which presented themselves during that seclusion from active duties, composed the following Essays, as a tribute and legacy of duty and affection, in his old age, to his beloved country.
