Prefatory Note.

WITH the consent of my friend, Mr. Fred. Horner, the Editor of the Whitehall Review; I am able to reprint the first instalment of a few fugitive recollections of a busy Bohemian life in London. Without order, without plan, without preliminary arrangement, these sketches have been dashed off, week after week, at lightning speed, without a single reference to a diary, or annal, or a book.

If the public is pleased with this preliminary canter in the way of Reminiscences of a very busy life, perhaps they will back me when I start seriously upon a more important book which will contain all that I remember of my life, the places I have seen, the difficulties I have combated, contrasted with the tender regard and sympathy that have been extended to me by the men and women I have esteemed and loved.
