ADVERTISEMENT.

THIS little work was written before I had any expectation of the honour which the University of Cambridge has done me, in appointing me to its Chair of Moral Philosophy; before I had even a dream of seeking for that honour. It is simply a book of practical morality and divinity, and has not the least of a scientific character. But I am not sorry that it should go forth as a witness that I desire, in whatever task I am engaged, to keep the interests of practical morality and divinity in sight, as paramount to all others.

LONDON, October, 1866.
