LLANDRILLO CHURCHYARD, 1901

*The little church that sees the sun
Each evening redden in the West,
Averts the wind and looks upon
The grave wherein his dust hath rest.*

*The happy plain is sweet around,
The hills are folded far and near,
Through all the day, scarce any sound
Save of slow wave is wasted here.*

*He loved the earth ; He loves it still,
I think with some diviner view,
That sees the gradual waters fill
A thousand bays with creeping blue,*

*But holds this little lofty place
Dearer because we gather there,
Remembering oft his living face
And his clear accents raised in prayer,*

*And wonder where beyond the West
Or in what quarter of the sky
His spirit holds its happy rest ;
And dream at times we feel him nigh.*

*Yet this we know ; Past sun or star
He hath exchanged for toil or grief
The peace of God which passeth far
Our understanding or believ.*
